Overview of Low-Income Ratepayer Assistance (LIRA) in San Diego

- San Diego has no assistance of any kind for low-income water ratepayers.
- In 2007, Councilmember Tony Atkins asked the City to consider voluntary ratepayer contributions to fund a Low-Income Ratepayer Assistance Program (LIRA).
- City Attorney agrees that City can establish program that accepts voluntary contributions to help ratepayers in need if program is self-funded – (see MOL of April 3, 2007.)

Number of Water Disconnections 2013 and 2014<sup>1</sup>

- 2013 – 18,914 disconnections
- 2014 – 19,514 disconnections

1. Statistics provided by San Diego Public Utilities Dept. Does not include voluntary shut-offs

Number of Water Reconnections 2013 and 2014<sup>2</sup>

Voluntary funded LIRA programs

- Tempe, AZ – accepts voluntary contributions and partners with a local non-profit service agency to distribute funds for qualified individuals.
- Salem, OR – also accepts voluntary contributions and partners with non-profit service agencies to distribute funds.

Ease of Administration

- Non-profits in San Diego, Campesinos Unidos (CUI) and MAAC project, have agreed to help the City administer such a program if available.
- CUI and MAAC Project currently administer programs for low-income electric ratepayer assistance in San Diego.
- No City employees or funding needed to monitor, audit, or manage program.

UCAN's Proposal to help low-income water ratepayers

City of San Diego:

- Give PUD more discretion to extend time for water customers to pay bills, fees and deposits.
- Ask PUD to identify any administrative issues in accepting voluntary ratepayer contributions.
- Ask PUD to identify any issues in partnering with CUI and MAAC Project to administer voluntarily funded LIRA program.
